

S. J. A. FRAZER TELLS OF LIFE

Confederate Soldier Tells of Old Chattanooga—Dr. Sims Saved His Life.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL 8 YRS.

Capt. S. J. A. Frazer, who will celebrate his eightieth birthday in January, 1920, has a host of interesting reminiscences of the early days of Chattanooga.

Capt. Frazer, a Confederate soldier, was born in Rhea county in 1840. He was severely wounded in the battle of Chickamauga and was taken to the house of Dr. Thomas McCallie. At that time the federal troops were in possession of Chattanooga. Capt. Frazer had been shot through the windpipe, and a surgeon in the federal army had mistakenly bandaged his wound in such a way that the windpipe was constricted and he was in danger of choking to death. Capt. Frazer was put under the care of Dr. P. D. Sims, and says that he has no doubt that Dr. Sims saved his life by his prompt treatment of his wound.

"The federal general, who seemed to be rather nervous, had had a bomb-proof dugout constructed," said Capt. Frazer. "In those days, dugouts were not as well known as they have become in the recent war, and everyone thought the general's idea rather unusual. Mrs. McCallie, who was a very high-spirited woman, used to tease the general about his bomb-proof shelter, and whenever she met him on the street would ask him if he did not hear the rumble of Confederate guns, and urge him to take shelter immediately. Dr. McCallie used to be afraid that the general would become angry, and begged Mrs. McCallie not to offend him, but she persisted, and the general, who was evidently a good-natured man as he was nervous, did not take offense."

As soon as he recovered from his wound, Capt. Frazer was sent to the federal prison on Johnson's island, where he remained for seventeen months. After the Civil war was over he came to Chattanooga, where he engaged in the practice of law.

He was attorney-general for eight years. At that time there were only ten counties in the circuit. "There were only two men hanged during the time that I was attorney-general," said Capt. Frazer. "One of these men, on the day before he was to be hanged, sent for me to come to see him. I hesitated to go, because I was afraid he would reproach me for prosecuting him, but I went. When I entered the cell I saw a well-dressed man who did not look at all like the man whom I had convicted of murder. It was Shade Westmoreland, however, and, much to my surprise, he did not reproach me for convicting him, but told me that he did not blame me at all for my share in his prosecution, and cordially invited me to attend the hanging, which was to take place on the following day."

"The other man had murdered his wife, and was convicted on the testimony of his sister. When the trial afterwards I was traveling through the western states, and fell into conversation with a man on the train. He asked me if I had ever known an attorney-general in Tennessee named Frazer, and went on to tell me the story of this murder trial. He said that he was impressed, when the trial first began, by the fact that the attorney-general was so much younger than the lawyers opposing him, but that when he saw how the sister of the accused man was led to convict him through a series of questions which at first appeared purposeless, his sympathy vanished. He was very much surprised when he learned my name and found out that I was the same young lawyer of whom he had been talking."

Capt. Frazer was one of the first settlers in North Chattanooga. The site on which his home now stands was once part of the Cowart estate. Capt. Frazer laid off the first lot ever sold on the north side of the river. He started the first store, and was also instrumental in establishing the first postoffice. There was much dispute concerning the title of the first settlement across the river, and a great many people wanted to call it "Harveston," but a decision was finally made in favor of "Hill City." At first, the only method of crossing the river was by means of a houseboat. A steam ferry company was organized, of which all the original stockholders are now dead except Capt. Frazer and Judge Barton. Capt. Frazer gave the right of way for the Walnut street bridge and contributed $5,000 for its erection. This bridge was completed about 1890.

MUST BE OUT. The editor was faithfully busy. He couldn't see anyone. When an old friend sent up his card he sighed, but decided not to see him. He called in the office boy.

"Look here," he said, "you must tell this man I'm out. I can't see him, and I wouldn't offend him for the world, so be sure to convince him that I really am out. You see?"

"Yes, sir," said the boy. Then after a pause, "I think I should be sure to convince him you were out if I went to him smoking one of your best cigars!"

GAMBLERS SEEK HARVEST THROUGH SUGAR CRISIS

SPECULATORS GRAB FUTURE SUPPLY AS THE END OF CONTROL NEARS.

AMERICA'S SWEET TOOTH

Since last year, statistics have gone all wrong in regard to sugar consumption.

That's why the housewife is unable to put up her usual stock of canned fruit. That's why the warning is going out to look for 100 per cent increase in price after the first of next year.

Thus far in 1919 we have consumed 900,000,000 pounds more than we did last year. Some say its prohibition, which develops an appetite for sweets instead of alcohol.

Home brewing may have something to do with it.

Hoarding is undoubtedly a factor.

Meanwhile, government regulation is relaxing and the food gamblers are already getting their hands on future supplies. They hope to dig deep into family purses after Jan. 1.

(BY HARRY B. HUNT.)

Washington.—The price of sugar will leap skyward if the plans of speculators are not upset.

Federal control of the country's sugar supply expires on Dec. 31.

The domestic demand exceeds all calculations and past records.

The stage is beautifully set for a killing by the food gamblers.

The sugar shortage, worse than wartime, now gripping the United States is attributed primarily to increased domestic consumption.

To the recent strike of marine workers at Atlantic ports at which shipments of raw sugar from Cuba are received.

The increased consumption of sugar in the United States to date, as against the same period last year, is about 900,000,000 pounds, or nine pounds per capita. The increase for the year is expected to be 1,125,000,000 pounds.

Prohibition and the resulting increased craving for sweets, is given as the chief reason for this increase.

Demand Increases With Prohibition.

Through the first four months of 1919 American consumption of sugar was about normal. In May and June, during which time a number of states went dry and supplies of liquid generally were more difficult to get, consumption increased appreciably over May and June of previous years.

In July, the month national prohibition became effective, sales of sugar jumped some 200,000,000 pounds above normal July sales. Use of sugar in home-made beverages may be an added factor.

The marine strike, which tied up vessels plying between New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Savannah and the West Indies, interrupted the flow of raw sugar to the eastern refineries. As a result, the output of refined sugar, for several weeks was cut from 25 to 75 per cent, at the different refineries, just at the time when the heaviest demands of the year for sugar for canning and preserving came upon the market.

Students of the sugar situation declare that unless strict regulations are enforced, similar to those effective under the food administration ages throughout this year and next, with prices skyrocketing to perhaps two or three times their present level, speculators grab supply for future.

The sugar equalization board, which bought the entire output of Cuban sugar this year, and which has been able to maintain a fairly steady level of prices, since its existence Jan. 1, unless new life is given it by congress, it has no authority to execute contracts running into next year. As contracts for Cuban raw sugar are normally made in October and November for the next year's output, the board is now barred from the field, but speculative interests are already making large contracts.

Unless congress acts, and acts quickly, the bulk of Cuba's next year's crop will have been contracted for by private interests and the price so inflated that 20-cent sugar will be almost a certainty for 1920. A bill by Senator McNary, of Oregon, is now before congress, extending the authority of the sugar equalization board through 1920, but no action has been taken on it.

Failure of the senate to ratify peace also is blamed as one of the factors in the present shortage. Big canners and preservers of fruit, who normally make their purchases of sugar early, waited this year until July and August, in the expectation that lower prices would follow the signing of peace. But peace was not signed, and their purchases, coming at the time the general public was buying sugar more heavily, drained the market.

Approximately 500,000 tons of sugar remain in Cuba of the last crop. And in the meantime, the United States is using between 500,000 and 600,000 tons per month.

Best Sugar Due Within a Month.

Best sugar supplies from Utah and other western states should begin to come on the market within the next month, relieving the situation in the west and middle west. This source will supply about 125,000 tons per month.

The Louisiana crop will not start till after Christmas. This winter's supplies from Hawaii and the Philippines will be practically negligible.

The prospect of losing Philippine sugar altogether in the future is a factor that should be viewed with concern by congress, in the opinion of Josiah Bernhardt, of the sugar equalization board. Japan has been busy buying sugar "prospects" in the Philippines covering the 1920 and 1921 crops, and has contracted to pay as high as 10 and 11 cents per pound at the mills as compared to a price of 5.5 which covered the whole of Cuba's contract with this country last year. There is considerable doubt whether the authority of the board extended over the Philippines and the whole crop of these islands may in the future fall into the hands of Asiatics.

WAS THE WAY HE SAID IT.

Mr. Swindlem was just going to put up the shutter in his drapery shop on that Saturday afternoon when the lady came in and bought some things.

"How much is that?"

"Three shillings, please, madam."

"Dear me! And I have only 2 shillings and 11 pence on me. Can't you let me have the things for that?"

"I'm afraid not, madam," said Mr. Swindlem. "But you can pay next time you are in."

"Supposing I die?" said the customer, laughing.

"It would be a small loss," answered the draper.—London Answerer.
